

PREMIUM CARE — THE APPLE LENS REVIEW

100 Recommendations for Calm Confidence

Version 1.0 · 8 July 2026 · Controlled document — custody: Creative Director

Mandate: Review Premium Care as if Apple had launched an elderly care company. Every recommendation increases elegance. Nothing is rebuilt. Nothing is regenerated. The goal is calm confidence — not excitement, not marketing. Only stillness, precision, and trust.

THE APPLE LENS

Apple does not sell products. It sells the absence of friction. The screen disappears. The device disappears. Only the intention remains. If Apple built an elderly care company, the website would not persuade. It would reassure. It would not explain. It would presence. Every pixel would ask: Does this reduce anxiety? If not, it would be removed.

What follows are 100 surgical recommendations. Each one answers: Would this make Premium Care feel like the care organisation Apple would build? If yes, it is included. If no, it is ignored.

HOMEPAGE — THE FIRST BREATH

- 1. Hero: One photograph. No text overlay. Text belongs below the image, never on it. Apple never places copy over product photography. The image is a window into a Danish home at 4pm. The text is a separate layer of thought. They do not compete.
- 2. Hero: No carousel. One image. One statement. The image changes only on page refresh, never auto-plays. Motion without purpose is anxiety. A still photograph is a promise that time has stopped — that someone is present, right now, in that room.
- 3. Hero headline: Six words maximum. Cormorant Garamond only. Cinzel is retired from headlines. Apple uses one typeface family for everything. The headline is a single breath: “Din mor fortjener tryghed.” Nothing more.
- 4. Hero: No navigation visible on first load. Only the wordmark, 16px, top-left. And the word “Menu”, 16px, bottom-left. The content breathes. Chrome is temporary. Content is permanent.
- 5. No sidebar. No widgets. No news ticker. No social proof banners. The homepage is not a dashboard. It is a statement. Every element that is not the statement is a distraction. Remove it.
- 6. The fold does not exist. The first screen is a statement. The second is a photograph. The third is a number. Each occupies a full viewport. The user scrolls through a sequence of calm, not a document of information.
- 7. No “Welcome to Premium Care” copy. Apple never welcomes you to the product. The product is the welcome. The care is the welcome. The first words should be recognition, not introduction.
- 8. No more than five full-viewport sections on the homepage. Each section is one idea. One image. Or one sentence. Or one number. Five sections. Five thoughts. Enough.
- 9. No video background. Video is motion without purpose. A still photograph is a moment of care, frozen. The caregiver’s hand on the elder’s shoulder. The cup of tea on the table. The light through the window. These do not move. They endure.

10. No “Book a consultation” button in the hero. The hero is not for conversion. It is for recognition. The CTA arrives after the third section, when the user has understood what Premium Care is, not what Premium Care sells.

11. No footer on the first viewport. The footer is the final section, not a persistent anchor. It is reached by scrolling, not by jumping. The journey is linear.

12. The wordmark: Small. 16px. Top-left. Not centred. Confidence does not need to shout its name. The wordmark is a whisper in the corner. The content is the voice.

13. Homepage load: No loading spinner. No skeleton screen. The page loads in one block, or not at all. The white screen before content is acceptable. White is not absence. It is possibility.

14. No cookie banner on first load. Defer the cookie notice to the second interaction. The first breath must be pure. A banner is an interruption. Apple does not interrupt.

15. The hero image: A hand, a shoulder, a cup of tea. Not a face. Faces in hero images are marketing. Hands are care. The photograph is shot at 50mm, f/2.8, natural light, no flash. The background is a real Danish home, slightly blurred. The foreground is a gesture of presence.

NAVIGATION — THE INVISIBLE HAND

16. Navigation is not a bar. It is a sheet. Tapping “Menu” reveals a full-screen overlay, Ivory, with five links in Cormorant Garamond, 24px, centred vertically. No hamburger icon. The word “Menu” is sufficient. Icons are for apps. Words are for institutions.

17. Five links. No more. “Tilgang”, “Services”, “Priser”, “Om os”, “Kontakt”. No dropdowns. No mega menus. No sub-links. If it cannot be said in five links, it does not need to be said.

18. Active state: Not a colour change. A weight change. From 400 to 500. The difference is felt, not seen. It is a whisper of emphasis, not a shout.

19. Navigation transition: 0.4s ease. The sheet slides up from the bottom, not down from the top. Natural, like a drawer opening. The motion is physics, not theatre.

20. No breadcrumb navigation. Breadcrumbs are for websites that have lost their way. Apple does not use breadcrumbs. Premium Care does not lose its way.

21. No search icon in the navigation. Search is for libraries. Care is not searched. It is found. The navigation is the map. The map is small.

22. Navigation on scroll: It disappears. The wordmark fades out after 100px of scroll. The page is the content. The chrome is temporary. The user should forget they are on a website.

23. No sticky header. Sticky headers are anchors. Anchors are anxiety. Let the user scroll freely. The page is a river, not a room.

24. Mobile navigation: Same full-screen sheet. No hamburger. No animation on the icon. The word “Menu”, 16px, bottom-center of the screen. The thumb reaches it naturally.

25. Navigation hover: No underline. No colour shift. The letter-spacing increases by 0.02em over 0.3s. A whisper of movement. The link breathes. It does not dance.

TYPOGRAPHY — THE VOICE OF THE INSTITUTION

26. One typeface. Cormorant Garamond for everything. Cinzel is retired from all body, headline, and UI use. It remains only in the wordmark lockup. Apple uses San Francisco for everything. Premium Care uses Cormorant for everything. One voice. One instrument.

27. Body text: 17px. Line height: 1.6. The extra pixel is for Danish, which has longer words. 1.6 is tight enough to hold together. Loose enough to breathe. 1.7 is too loose. The text feels scattered.

28. Headings: No bold. No heavy weight. 400 for everything. Hierarchy is achieved through size, not weight. Apple's headlines are light, not bold. Bold is shouting. Size is architecture.

29. Display text: 48px maximum. Never larger. A headline that fills the screen is a headline that has nothing to say. The largest words should be the fewest words.

30. Letter-spacing: -0.01em for headlines. Tight, not loose. Tightness signals precision. Looseness signals uncertainty. The letters hold each other.

31. All text: Left-aligned. Never centred. Except the hero statement and the footer. Centred text is for poems. Left-aligned text is for institutions. The eye travels a straight line.

32. No italic for emphasis. Italic is for citations. Emphasis is achieved through sentence structure, not slant. A sentence that needs italic to be understood is a sentence that has not been written well.

33. The “Voice of the Elder”: Cormorant Garamond, 19px, 400, left-aligned. 55-character line length. No quotation marks. No attribution. No italics. The voice is the text. The text is the voice.

34. Numbers: Tabular figures. A satisfaction rate of 94.2% aligns vertically with 87.5%. Precision is elegance. Misaligned numbers are carelessness.

35. No all-caps. Anywhere. Except the wordmark. Sentence case is human. All-caps is mechanical. A care institution speaks in sentences, not acronyms.

36. “Read more”: Not a button. Not underlined. An arrow → in Regal Gold, 16px, with the text “Læs mere” in Midnight Navy, 16px. The arrow is the invitation. The underline is a scar.

37. Form labels: Inside the field, not above it. The label is the placeholder. When the user types, the label shrinks to 11px and rises above the field. The field is never empty. Apple does this. Premium Care does this.

38. Error messages: Not red. Not bold. A 1px Dannebrog Red border on the field. The text “Udfyld venligst” in 13px, Midnight Navy, below the field. Red text is shouting. A red border is a gentle correction.

39. Link colour: Midnight Navy. Not Regal Gold. Gold is for the brand. Navy is for interaction. Underline on hover: 1px solid, offset 4px. The offset creates space between the text and the line. Breathing room.

40. No text-shadow. Anywhere. Shadows on text are insecurity. The type is beautiful enough on its own. It does not need to lift off the page.

SPACING — THE ARCHITECTURE OF SILENCE

41. The 8px grid is the invisible skeleton. Every element aligns to it. The user never sees lines. They feel the order. The grid is not a design tool. It is a discipline.
 42. Section padding: 120px vertical. Minimum. A section with 60px padding feels crowded. 120px is a breath. 160px is a sigh. The page breathes in sections.
 43. Component gaps: 24px. Not 16px. Not 32px. 24px is the atomic unit of Premium Care spacing. It is the distance between two thoughts that are related but distinct.
 44. Page margins: 8% of viewport width. Not 64px. Percentage margins scale with the device. Fixed margins break on large screens. The page should feel the same on a 27-inch monitor and a 13-inch laptop.
 45. No full-bleed text. Text never touches the edge of the screen. Minimum 8% margin on all sides. Even on mobile. Especially on mobile. The margin is the hand that holds the page.
 46. Space between heading and paragraph: 32px. Not 16px. The heading needs room to resonate before the paragraph begins. 32px is a pause. 16px is a collision.
 47. Space between paragraphs: 24px. A fixed 24px. Not 1.5× line height. Consistent. Predictable. The eye knows what to expect.
 48. Image captions: 8px below the image. Not 16px. The image and caption are one unit. 8px binds them. 16px separates them.
 49. The footer: 160px padding top. The footer is the final breath. It needs room. The user has arrived at the end of the journey. The space is the arrival.
 50. No horizontal rules between sections. The space is the separator. 120px of space says “new section” more elegantly than any line. A line is a crack. Space is a bridge.

PHOTOGRAPHY — THE EVIDENCE OF PRESENCE

51. Every photograph: Full-bleed or exactly 680px wide, centred. No intermediate sizes. No floating images with text wrap. The image is a statement, not an illustration. It commands the full width or it does not appear.
52. No image borders. No rounded corners. A photograph is a window. Windows have sharp corners. Rounded corners are for apps. Care is not an app.
53. Image loading: Fade in over 0.6s. No placeholder colour. The page waits for the image, or the image loads in place. No grey box. Grey is uncertainty. The fade is a gentle arrival.
54. The hero image: Shot at 50mm, f/2.8, natural light, no flash. The background is a real Danish home, slightly blurred. The foreground is a hand, a shoulder, a cup of tea. Not a face. Faces are marketing. Gestures are care.
55. No stock photography. Apple does not use stock photography. They photograph their own products in their own light. Premium Care photographs its own caregivers in their own homes. Authenticity is the only currency that cannot be counterfeited.
56. Image captions: 13px, Cormorant Garamond, 400, Midnight Navy, left-aligned. No italics. No centred captions. The caption is a fact, not a poem. It aligns with the image, not with the

57. No image carousels. One image per section. If there are multiple images, they are stacked vertically with 120px between them. The user scrolls through a gallery at their own pace. They do not click arrows.

58. Portrait orientation images: Allowed. Not everything must be landscape. A vertical photograph of a window, a door, a hallway, creates rhythm. The page is a sequence of compositions, not a uniform grid.

59. The colour grade: Desaturated by 12%. Warm shadows. Cool highlights. The world of Premium Care is not more colourful than reality. It is more considered. The saturation is restrained, like the care.

60. No image overlays. No text on images. No gradient scrims. No darkening. The image is the image. The text is the text. They never compete. A gradient scrim is a lie. It says the image is not strong enough on its own.

LANGUAGE — THE WORDS OF CALM

61. No adjectives. “Compassionate care” is an adjective. “We sit with your mother” is a verb. Verbs are actions. Actions are trust. Adjectives are decoration.

62. No superlatives. “Denmark’s best” is a superlative. “We are here every day” is a fact. Facts are trustworthy. Superlatives are anxiety. They demand belief without evidence.

63. No exclamation marks. Anywhere. Exclamation marks are excitement. Calm confidence is declarative. A period is a full stop. A full stop is a promise kept.

64. The word “premium”: Used only in the name. Never in body copy. “Premium service” is redundant. The name is the promise. The copy is the proof. Repeating the name is insecurity.

65. No jargon. “Holistic care pathway” is jargon. “We talk to your doctor” is language. Jargon is a wall. Language is a door.

66. Danish first. Always. Even in the English version, the Danish sensibility — direct, modest, precise — governs the tone. The English should feel translated from Danish, not written for an international market.

67. Sentence length: Maximum 18 words. Long sentences are anxiety. Short sentences are clarity. The mind processes short sentences without effort. Effort is friction. Friction is fear.

68. Paragraph length: Maximum 3 sentences. A paragraph is a thought. A thought should not be long. Three sentences. One idea. Then space. Then the next idea.

69. The word “tryghed”: Used sparingly. Once per page. If everything is secure, nothing is secure. The word must be earned. Its scarcity is its power.

70. No “we understand” statements. “We understand how difficult this is” is patronising. “This is difficult” is recognition. Recognition does not claim understanding. It simply names the truth.

71. No FAQs. FAQs are for companies that failed to explain themselves. The content should be so clear that no question remains. If a question remains, the content is rewritten, not supplemented.

72. The call to action: Never “Book now”. Always “Kontakt os” or “Lad os mødes”. The invitation is open-ended. Urgency is for sales. Openness is for care. “Now” is pressure. “Os” is presence.

ANIMATION — MOTION WITH PURPOSE

73. No parallax. Parallax is decoration. The scroll is a journey, not a ride. The content moves at one speed. The user moves at their own speed. These speeds are the same.

74. Scroll behaviour: Smooth scroll, 1.2s duration, ease-out. Not instant. Not slow. The page glides. The user does not jerk from section to section. They flow.

75. No auto-playing animations. Nothing moves unless the user asks it to move. A page that moves on its own is a page that does not trust the user.

76. Hover states: 0.3s transition. Not 0.1s (too fast, feels broken). Not 0.5s (too slow, feels lazy). 0.3s is the speed of a breath.

77. Page transition: Fade to Ivory, then fade in. When navigating from one page to another, the current page fades to Ivory over 0.4s. Then the new page fades in from Ivory over 0.4s. No sliding. No pushing. A fade is a breath between thoughts.

78. No loading animations. No spinners. No dots. If the server is slow, the page stays white. White is not absence. White is possibility. A spinner is an apology. Apple does not apologise for loading. It ensures loading does not happen.

79. Image hover: No zoom. No lift. No shadow. The image is still. The cursor is the only movement. The image does not react to the user. It simply is. This is confidence.

80. Focus states: 2px Midnight Navy outline, offset 2px. Not a blue glow. Not a dotted line. A clean outline for accessibility. The outline is visible but not loud. It respects the user without disturbing the design.

CTAS — THE INVITATION, NOT THE DEMAND

81. One primary CTA per page. Not two. Not three. The user should never choose between actions. The page chooses for them. The CTA is the single door at the end of the corridor.

82. Primary CTA: Midnight Navy fill, Ivory text, 48px height, 24px horizontal padding. No border-radius. The text is 16px, 400, sentence case. The button is a rectangle. Rectangles are serious. Rounded corners are friendly. Care is serious.

83. Secondary CTA: Transparent, 1px Midnight Navy border, Midnight Navy text. Same dimensions. Used only when two actions are genuinely necessary. Two buttons are a conversation. Three buttons are a committee.

84. No ghost buttons. Ghost buttons are buttons that are not buttons. They are uncertainty. A button should be a button. Or it should be text. There is no in-between.

85. No button icons. A button with an arrow is trying too hard. The text is the arrow. “Kontakt os” is the invitation. The arrow is redundant.

86. CTA placement: After the third section. Not in the hero. Not in the header. The user must understand before they act. The CTA is the reward for attention, not the price of entry.

87. Hover on CTA: The background lightens by 5%. Not a colour change. A subtle shift. The button breathes. It does not shout. It does not dance. It simply brightens.

88. No sticky CTA. No floating action button. No chat widget. The page is the experience. The CTA is part of the content. A floating button is a salesperson who follows you through the store. Apple does not do this. Premium Care does not do this.

SCROLLING — THE JOURNEY

89. Scroll snap on the homepage. Each section snaps to the viewport centre. Not free scroll. The user lands on a section, not between sections. This is Apple product page behaviour. The page is a sequence of rooms, not a continuous hallway.

90. No scroll progress bar. No “back to top” button. The user knows where they are. The page is not a mountain. Progress bars are for downloads. Back-to-top buttons are for apologies.

91. No infinite scroll. Pagination is finite. The footer exists. The end is a destination, not a cliff. The user should feel the satisfaction of completion.

92. No scroll-triggered animations that reveal content. Content is present. The scroll does not unlock it. The scroll moves through it. The user is not rewarded with motion for scrolling. The content is simply there, waiting.

93. No sticky sidebars. No floating navigation. The page is a single column of content. The user scrolls. The content passes. This is all. There is no sidebar because there is no side. There is only the path.

94. The footer: Reached by scrolling. Not by clicking. The footer is the end of the story. The user arrives there naturally, like arriving at the end of a book.

CONTENT DENSITY, HIERARCHY & WHITESPACE — THE FINAL REFINEMENTS

95. One idea per screen. Not two. Not a list of three. One photograph and one sentence. Or one number and one context. The eye rests. The mind absorbs. Then the user scrolls.

96. No bullet points. Bullet points are for PowerPoint. Sentences are for people. A list of services is a paragraph of care. The paragraph flows. Bullets stop.

97. No side-by-side comparisons. “Us vs. them” is marketing. “This is what we do” is confidence. A comparison admits there is a choice. Confidence does not acknowledge competitors.

98. No social proof widgets. No star ratings. No “4.9 out of 5” badges. No Trustpilot logos. Trust is not voted on. Trust is demonstrated. A badge is a plea. A quiet page is a promise.

99. No newsletter signup. No “Stay updated”. No “Follow us”. A care institution does not have followers. It has families. A newsletter is a subscription. Care is not a magazine. The user leaves the site when they are ready. They are not asked to stay.

100. The final screen: The crest, small, centred, above the address. No tagline. No social links. No copyright notice (it is in the Trust Bar). The crest alone. The mark is the signature. The page ends with the symbol of the institution, not a request for action.
